Quality Health Care Services Meet Children Where They Are

School-based health centers are partnerships between health care providers and schools that offer integrated health care services to children and adolescents. School-based health centers provide accessible, affordable, and high-quality care to keep children healthy, in school, and ready to learn.

Several factors affect a school-based health center's ability to sustain itself and provide effective care. In today's changing health care environment, school-based health centers must demonstrate their value to private funders, health care payers, and the communities they serve.

JSI has the expertise and experience working with school-based health centers to guide them through state and national health care reform and position them for continued success.

- Strategic Planning: JSI's structured but flexible approach to strategic planning includes internal and external environment analysis, SWOT (strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats) analysis, and retreat/meeting facilitation.
- Grant Writing: JSI's experience in program planning, budgeting, and evaluation results in competitive applications for public and private funding opportunities.
- Research and Evaluation: JSI assesses community needs and identifies opportunities to maximize and diversify revenue and improve program quality of care and sustainability.
- Training and Technical Assistance: JSI's dynamic and innovative training and technical assistance solutions help school-based health centers improve and expand their health care services.
- Community Outreach Programs: JSI's expertise in payment reform, health literacy, cultural competency, and use of social media for outreach and engagement helps programs recruit and retain patients.
